SILENCE OF SEA STILL HOLDS FATE OF THE "OLD GLORY"

No Further Word Has Been Received of The Plane

LINERS MAKE SEARCH

Nothing Found Which Would Be Likely to Lead to Information

By International News Service

Developments today in the various long distance flights:

1. No trace of Old Glory, missing 500 miles off Newfoundland.
2. Sir John Carling believed speeding toward England.
3. Brock and Schlee leave Rangoon for Bangkok, Siam.
4. Courtney still delayed in Spain.
5. Levine delays hop-off because of bad weather.
6. MacIntosh held in Ireland by unfavorable winds.
7. Royal Windsor plans to leave today for England.

By International News Service

With no radio to tell a waiting world of their progress, Captain Terry Tully and Lieut. James Medcalf were believed far out over the Atlantic this morning, speeding toward London, England, in the monoplane Sir John Carling on an attempted flight from Newfoundland to Europe.

The fliers, who took off from Harbor Grace, N. F., at 7.25 o'clock, eastern standard time, yesterday morning, know by now the apparent fate which has befallen the Fokker monoplane, Old Glory, which took off from Old Orchard, Maine, at 12.26 p. m., Tuesday.

Although Tully and Medcalf were kept in ignorance of the fact that Old Glory had broadcast a frantic S.O.S. before they started on their daring flight across the Atlantic, they learned the news as soon as they opened the leather case containing the maps which were to be used on the trans-Atlantic voyage. Friends of the fliers, feeling they should be apprised of Old Glory's fate, yet fearing the news might shake the confidence with which they started on the hazardous venture, slipped a brief penciled note inside the map case a few moments before the Sir John Carling's take-off, choosing this method of letting the fliers know that still another trans-Atlantic flight had apparently ended in disaster.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8 (I.N.S.)—The mysterious silence of the sea today shrouded the fate of the Fokker monoplane Old Glory, which is feared to have crashed into the Atlantic Ocean 500 miles east of Newfoundland.

No further word had been heard early today which might indicate what tragedy caused Lloyd Bertaud, James D. Hill and Philip A. Payne, pilot, navigator and passenger in Old Glory on its apparently ill-fated attempted flight to Rome, to startle the world early yesterday morning with a frantic S.O.S. call sent crackling through the ether from the plane's radio.

Two of the trans-Atlantic liners which rushed to the assistance of Old Glory when the distress signal was heard, abandoned the search for the plane after a hunt of many hours. The vessels were the Transylvania and the Carmania, which were the first to reach the spot where the plane broadcast its message of distress before it is believed to have fallen into the sea.

Captain David Bone of the Transylvania late last night sent the following message to the Radio Corporation in New York:

"Area from which it is presumed airplane W R H P (call letters of Old Glory) sent S.O.S. has been searched by us without anything being found. Fear little hope survival in view of rough sea at time casualty."

Shortly after this message was received, the Captain of the S. S. Carmania radioed as follows:

"22.20 (10.20 p. m.) G. M. T. latitude 49:15 north; 40:25 west. Now nightfall and quite dark. Regret search for missing plane without results. Weather conditions fresh westerly winds, quite squally and rough breaking seas. Proceeding great circle to Cape Race and then New York."

CHILDREN TO HAVE NEW STORY SERIES

General Inspection and Maintenance Supper Plans Announced

A BIG IMPROVEMENT

YARDLEY, Sept. 8.—Much more than local interest attaches to the coming re-opening of the Yardley Free Public Library, which has been undergoing extensive repairs and improvements.

For one thing the Library is now approaching its centennial anniversary, having been founded in 1845. The present building was erected 50 years ago and has since stood as a quaint and picturesque structure on the shore of Lake Afton, passed by the highway leading from this place to Newtown and other parts of Bucks County. Early records attest the low cost of construction work half a century ago, for the building at that time represented an outlay of only $600, less than the amount expended for the present alterations. To be exact, the present improvements cost a trifle less than $800 and the full expense is fully covered by the sums subscribed and contributed during last winter's financial campaign promoted by the Yardley Civic Club which has long been an enthusiastic backer of the library work.

Among other things the improvements made give the library more than a 50 per cent. increase in shelf room, together with adequate working space in a newly constructed gallery, a new changing counter, a new magazine rack and ingenuously arranged picture files. A marked improvement is the changing of the entrance to one side, adjacent to the lake. This not only adds to the architectural appearance of the structure but also makes for safety, particularly in the case of children, inasmuch as patrons no longer have to step directly into street traffic as they leave the doorway. Another change in appearance has been secured by the addition of an elaborate window in the west gable.

Benefits derived include the provision of room for a large number of old volumes long held in storage. Among these books are those of the Thomas Yardley collection. One priceless volume is more than 200 years old. Ancient records of the institution can now be brought forward and placed where they will be secure and available.

Improvement of the library, made possible by the drive of the Civic Club, has been done under the personal direction of one of the members of the Board of Managers, J. R. Hershey, chairman of the building committee. He had the co-operation of Heacock & Hokanson, Philadelphia architects. A. S. Hibbs, of Fallsington, was the carpenter and A. W. Blake the painter.

In addition to Mr. Hershey, members of the Board of Managers are: Augustus J. Cadwallader, president; Jesse E. Harper, vice-president; Miss Elizabeth Clayton, treasurer; Mrs. T. Sidney Cadwallader, secretary; Mrs. Charles M. Eames, Mrs. Eliza C. Smith, Marion Davis and Alfred A. Danser. Mr. Davis and Mr. Danser represent the Borough Council on the Board of Managers. Council each year makes a contribution to the upkeep of the institution. Mrs. Elliot D. Cook is the librarian and Miss Alice L. Cook is assistant. Miss Louise Cadwallader has also been assisting in the re-cataloguing and placing of the books.

Started originally as a corporation, with dues for the loan of books, the Library was freed to the public some seven or eight years ago and has since rendered enlarged service to the community, especially in the matter of providing reading and reference volumes for school children.

Juvenile interest in the library is to be increased during the coming year by the introduction of a Children's Story Hour to be conducted each Saturday morning by Elmer Duerr, of this place, formerly assistant librarian. Mr. Duerr is a graduate elocutionist who has of late had much success as a radio broadcaster. He plans to divide his Story Hour series into three sections to suit all grades of childhood. The first of the series will be conducted next Saturday at 10.30 o'clock.

ITALIAN RESPONSIBILITY

(Translation of An Editorial Appearing in La Guida Operaia)

THE action of the regular Republicans of Bristol in making our compatriot, Frank M. Spezzano, their candidate for the nomination for Borough Council in the Fifth Ward, is something that should inspire the serious thought of every voter who is of Italian birth or descent, whether he or she reside in the Fifth Ward or elsewhere in the town.

Our first thought is likely to be that we all owe something of appreciation to Mr. Spezzano for having made himself so worthy of this consideration, and thus having won the honor of such recognition. That is quite true and we frankly acknowledge the indebtedness which all of us must feel.

But it would be wholly unfair—and we believe that Mr. Spezzano would be one of the first to say so—for anyone to seriously suggest that he is the only citizen of Italian birth in Bristol who is worthy of such recognition. There are many others, which is all the more creditable to all of us who are of Italian extraction, and the statement in no way detracts from the acknowledged worth of Mr. Spezzano.

But this phase of the matter is not the big consideration that the proposal of Mr. Spezzano for Borough Council should bring to mind. The larger aspect of the situation is in the great light which it throws upon equality and opportunity here in America, and the great progress that all of us have made since the first Italians settled in Bristol.

This in turn brings another thought. Deep and enduring as may be our affection for, and sentimental attachment to, the mother country, we cannot but contrast these opportunities and this advancement with conditions that prevailed for centuries under monarchy in Italy, where one hardly could hope, from birth until old age and death, to acquire more that his parents, his grandparents and his great-grandparents had during their lives acquired before him.

Do we always appreciate these opportunities and all that they mean? No, for we are human, we become accustomed, and we forget. It is well, therefore, that there are occasions such as this to bring the matter back to our minds.

But are these the only thoughts that the endorsement of Mr. Spezzano for Borough Council stirs within us? Decidedly not; for while we like to regard this wise act by the regular Republicans of Bristol as a well-earned recognition of Italian worth, integrity and capability, it is something more than that. It is a serious and timely step in the direction of placing upon the shoulders of the Italian citizenship their share of the burden of actual municipal management.

Citizens of Bristol who are of Italian birth, parentage or descent, have reached a point in their continuous progress, and have shared so long in all the benefits, advantages and opportunities conferred by our local government, that they could not if they would, and would not if they could, longer escape the honor and responsibility of participating actively in the management of Borough affairs through one of their own representatives.

The regular Republicans of Bristol have recognized this situation and its necessities, even as we Italian citizens have recognized it; they have created the opportunity and emphasized the obligation which marks the beginning of this new order of things. We appreciate and acknowledge the vision, the understanding and the broad spirit of justice and progress

MISSIONARY DIES AS HE CARRIES OUT DUTIES

Victor G. Plymire's Death Occurs After Wife And Son Succumb

REPORTED MURDERED

YORK, Pa., Sept. 8 (I.N.S.)—Reports of the death of Victor G. Plymire, of York, at the hands of tribesmen in Tibet, now being checked by the British Foreign Office, reveal a story of a missionary's devotion to duty in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties, his old friends here say.

Plymire, who was in the service of the Gospel Herald Society, the Church of Apostolic Holiness and the American Assembly of God, entered the mission field in China seven years ago. With his wife, a former Franklin, Pa., resident, he made his home in Tagur, China. Last winter, the couple, with their six year old son refused to leave when a smallpox epidemic swept the native town, and the wife and child fell victims of the dread disease, their death following.

With increasing hostilities among natives in China recently, Plymire was given a furlough, and was believed to have started for India in company with W. Watkinson, of the China Inland Mission, and Dr. Flichner, a German scientist. The hazardous overland trip brought them to the Tibet border, where, meager reports say, the three men were killed by tribesmen.

Plymire has a brother, Melvin Plymire, in Loganville, near here; a brother, Ralph Plymire, of Lebanon, and a sister, Mrs. Jay Johnson, also of Lebanon.

—Mr. and Mrs. Jack Pennington and daughter, Dorothy, and son, Thomas, of Stroudsburg, Pa., were week-end and Labor Day guests of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Coombs, of Jackson street. Mr. and Mrs. Pennington were former Bristolians.

—Mr. and Mrs. John Bingham and children, of Cedar street, have returned from a visit with relatives in Reading, Pa.

READY TO BATTLE FOR WATER RIGHTS

Trenton and Delaware River Valley Association Will Oppose

MEET THIS AFTERNOON

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 8.—New York's latest scheme to tap Delaware River tributary waters is scheduled to meet the official opposition of the Delaware River Valley Association, when that organization meets this afternoon in the Council Chamber of the City Hall here. Already, the body, through a committee of its officers, has drafted a resolution which will serve notice on New York authorities of its intention to legally oppose the plan. This is one of the measures up for ratification by the body today.

Edgar H. Wilson, secretary of the association, announces a busy program for this afternoon, which will include addresses by men prominent in the water supply discussion. Among those who are scheduled to take part in the meeting are Major Ezra B. Whitman, of Baltimore, Trenton's consultant engineer in the recent water battle; Clyde Potts, mayor of Morristown, former Governor E. C. Stokes and City Commissioner Swan. Frank J. Eppele, president of the association, will preside. The meeting will begin at 2.30 o'clock.

That Trenton is officially ready to fight the latest proposed plan of New York, was learned yesterday, when it was agreed that copies of the resolution recently approved by the City Commission, be served on New York City officials and the State Board of Water Supply. This resolution also notifies New York of Trenton's intention to put up legal combat.

Aside from consideration of plans for fighting the New York scheme, the Delaware River Valley Association today will take up other matters of official business. Formal adoption of a constitution and election of directors are scheduled.

LATE NEWS

CHICAGO, Sept. 8 (I.N.S.)—Three persons were killed, two were probably fatally injured, and damage estimated at $200,000 was caused early today by two mysterious explosions on the south side of Chicago. Federal and city investigators, who began an immediate inquiry expressed the opinion that an alcohol feud may be responsible for the blasts. Both explosions occurred within a radius of six blocks and within a period of 45 minutes. It is believed the terrific detonations resulted from exploding stills.

BENSALEM CHURCH WILL OBSERVE ITS 117TH ANNIVERSARY

Three Speakers of Note To Occupy Pulpit On Sunday

DR. EVANS WILL SPEAK

Invitation Extended to Pastors Formerly Serving The Church

Three speakers of note will occupy the pulpit of the Bensalem Methodist Episcopal Church on Sunday next, when the 117th anniversary of the establishment of said congregation will be observed.

Dr. Thomas H. Evans, superintendent of the North District of the Philadelphia conference, will bring the message at the first service of the day, 10.30 a. m., daylight saving time. At the afternoon meeting which will take place at 2.30, the Rev. Richard Radcliffe, pastor of the Central M. E. Church, Frankford, Philadelphia, will speak, while the evening sermon at eight o'clock will be by Dr. William H. Ford, superintendent of the Northwest District.

Invitations have been extended to pastors who formerly served at this charge, and special music has been arranged for. In the morning the choir of the Hulmeville M. E. Church will give selections, while at the 2.30 o'clock service anthems and quartette selections will be rendered by the Bristol M. E. Church choir. In the evening the orchestra of the Holmesburg M. E. Church will be present.

The congregation of the Hulmeville Church will attend the morning service in a body.

The Rev. Walter S. Johnston is pastor of the Bensalem Church.

Bensalem Church has a fine record which really commenced about the year 1812, when a large gain in membership was made following a revival that year. Prior to that time preachers on various circuits preached there at stated intervals. Following the revival meetings, services took place in the school house at Hulmeville on Trenton Road. A church was established in 1840, and a few of the trustees of Bensalem acted also as trustees for Hulmeville.

It was in 1853 that the present edifice was erected, when again a great revival brought many into the church. For a period "Old Bensalem" and Cornwells held meetings together, but in 1902 Bensalem again united with Hulmeville, this combination remaining until 1916 when the charge became separate.

Within the past few years a social hall was built next to the church and there many social activities of the congregation take place.

All Fathers Urged To Attend First Meeting

All members of the Fathers' Association, connected with the Bristol public schools, are urged to be present at the meeting to be held in the high school auditorium, this evening at 8 o'clock.

Last year was the most successful in the history of the organization, and it is the desire of the officers and executive committee, to make this the banner year, so far as membership and interest are concerned.

An interesting program has been arranged for the meeting tonight. William C. Boyer, who has spent many years as a missionary in Africa, will give an illustrated talk on the "Congo." Those who have heard Rev. Boyer say he is a most interesting and entertaining speaker and that a treat is in store for all who attend.

Vocal solos will be rendered by John Brehm and there will be group singing by the members. The usual luncheon will be served, and at the conclusion of the meeting, the athletic equipment in the gymnasium may be used by those who desire.

Continuing its policy of co-operation, the Bristol Exchange Club will entertain the speaker at dinner.

OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY

Special service was held at the Bensalem M. E. Church on Sunday, August 21st, in honor of the 95th birthday anniversary of Miss Mary Gillingham, of Hulmeville. Miss Gillingham has been a member of the Bensalem Church for 77 years.

CORRECTION

In an article, quoted from the Doylestown Intelligencer of September 3rd, in yesterday's issue of the Courier, relative to the improvements viewed in Bristol by representative citizens from the upper end of the county recently, the amount of the budget on which Bristol borough is operating was given as $480,000. This sum should have been $80,000, the wrong amount being shown by a typographical error.

THOSE WHO SACRIFICED

Many are the endorsements that have been heard about Bristol, referring to the recent act of Bristol Borough Council in appropriating a sum to fittingly pay respect to Bristol's heros who paid the supreme sacrifice.

Boys of the borough who served their country in the great cause back in '17 and '18 will act as our official representatives as they travel to the scene of the terrific combats of the World War this month.

Now sleeping in French soil are two who are near to us—Bernard McIlvaine and Angelo Angelilli. These left their homes for hardships; from a land of plenty and comfort they sailed to one wrecked by shell and cannon; from a life of service they were translated to the Great Beyond.

These with many others have tenderly been placed at rest in the myriads of cross-decked graves. Combined efforts of our government and the French folk have made their resting places attractive. But now those who knew them, with whom they played or attended school, will carry a token of esteem and affection from those who regarded them as friends, and who know all that their great sacrifice held.

American soil will be mingled with that of France, as it finds its way in miniature coffins from Bristol to the beds in the hillside of France. Some French earth will be tenderly lifted from the resting places and given to the dear ones of our heros.

We honor those who fought for us, and gave all in a just cause.

THE UNDESIRABLE

Professor East, of Harvard, estimates that 25 per cent. of the people in the United States are undesirable citizens. In the absence of reasonably accurate statistics, his calculations may be high or they may be low. Individuals may disagree materially on this question.

In coming to his conclusion Professor East took into consideration the economic, moral and social characteristics which might determine fitness for citizenship and the value of the citizen to the state. His researches have convinced him that both native-born and aliens are numbered among his undesirables.

There is a serious omission in Professor East's statement. He has not been explicit as to what constitutes the economic, social and moral standards upon which he determines the "desirability" of the citizen.

A man may be self-sustaining yet not contribute to the social and moral well-being of society; or he may meet moral expectations yet be an economic burden on society. A man's attitude and effort may pass rigid inspection, yet his accomplishment may be nil.

Professor East does not make it plain whether all of the 25 per cent. are undesirable for all three reasons or some for one reason and others for another. If he recommends deportation for the morally and socially undesirable as well as for the economically undesirable, has he taken into consideration the possibility that some of those who could be dispensed with because of moral or social faults might be economically indispensable to the country?

Americanism: Following the crowd; scolding because the place is so crowded.

Alas! when kids are raised to take things easy, too often they are other people's things.

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Emmett Murtough of Killanmaul, Ireland, emigrates to America and is followed by Sheila Kildare, to whom he is bethrothed, and her father. Sheila makes friends with the family of Rory O'Shea, a professional boxer whom Emmett scorns. Sheila begins to see through Murtough's boasting, and Rory escorts her to Coney Island on an automobile trip. Kildare will not work and Sheila gets a position as a waitress. Murtough is now employed by a bootlegging gang.

The place had been one of the fine estates which were constructed twenty odd years ago. Behind the house was a huge barn, and when the car approached it a voice from behind it suddenly queried, sharp and low:

"That you, Dixon?" Dixon halted the machine.

"Yes."

"All right. Everything's ready. We've gone over the truck, plenty of gas, oil, water, everything's shipshape. Stretch your legs a minute."

The four men piled out, stiff from the long ride from the city. Simmons, in charge of the cache, guided them into the barn. It was in pitch darkness. As the last man entered Simmons switched on a flashlight. The truck stood facing the double barn doors. On roughly constructed bunks, covered with blankets, two other men were resting. Simmons turned on two auto lamps, went to what was formerly a harness closet and brought forth bottles of liquor and cups. The men helped themselves to the liquor, drinking it raw.

"That's real stuff, hasn't been cut," Simmons remarked.

"Mannie's got a tip off that Stevens is going to try to lift this load on the way in. Hear anything?"

Murtough pulled a flashlight from his pocket and examined Evens.

"Haven't seen anything suspicious around here all day, but, of course, they'll work nearer to the city. Better take another shot if that's true. That Stevens crowd is a rough one," warned Simmons.

"Well, he'll have to go some to get us," Murtough declared as he flung down another drink of the liquor. "Better fill up a couple of flasks, one for the truck and one for Dixon," he suggested. Simmons got two pint flasks and opening another bottle filled them, handing one to Murtough and one to the driver of the pilot car.

"I been in these rackets," Simmons went on. "Watch one thing, don't let 'em cut your truck off from your pilot. If you do, they've got you where you can't help each other."

"Okey, Murtough?" asked Dixon. "Right, let's go!"

Dixon and Williams went out through the small door to the pilot car and Murtough and Evans clambered on board the truck. He started the engine and let it run until he was satisfied it was warm. Simmons and one of his helpers opened the double doors.

"All right, let's go," called Murtough. The pilot car turned into the road and the truck followed. The pacemaker slowly climbed in speed from twenty to twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five, and soon they were bowling along at an even forty miles an hour, a pace that must be maintained until they came into the city.

An hour passed. They were taking the back roads, roads that were good driving but which avoided meeting with other motor traffic. There were a dozen such back country thoroughfares leading to the city and if they were fortunate it was probable that they might thus evade the Stevens ambuscade, if there was to be one that night. Dixon was driving with dimmers only and his red tail lights. Murtough carried no lights at all. The distance between the pilot car and the truck seemed to maintain an even fifty feet regardless of the character of the going. The whiskey had warmed Murtough and the thrill of driving headlong into the black night with only those two red eyes ahead to guide him was upon him.

A shot rang out. Murtough saw in a single flash the red lights careen to the right of the road ahead. It was now his business to drive into or over any obstacle that lay in his path until he had passed the pilot car. That had been the plan. Suddenly he was blinded by powerful automobile searchlights turned full onto the truck from cars parked on either side of the road. Involuntarily he threw on his brake. Another shot and Evans slipped from his place beside Murtough and into the roadway. Murtough felt the impact of a bullet in his right shoulder and a hairbreadth second later heard the explosion of the gun that had driven it there. Out of the darkness beside the parked cars stepped six men.

Two approached Dixon's car and ordered him out. Murtough saw him full in the bright light as he himself climbed with difficulty down from his seat at the order of the hi-jackers who covered him with their automatics. The pilot car had slithered into the sandy ditch on the right and seemed to be out of commission.

"Quick," snapped the head of the highwaymen. "Into that truck there. I'll lead. You, Jack, follow up the truck." Not five minutes had passed until the hi-jackers, with the front and rear motors-guards were escorting the speeding truck cityward.

Murtough pulled a flashlight from his hip pocket and examined Evens. He was dead. He carried the body to the pilot car. Dixon was assisting Williams, badly wounded, into the rear seat of the pilot car.

"How did you come out, Murtough?"

"Clipped in the shoulder. Hurts but don't think it's bad."

"They missed me," Dixon said. "We'll have to leave Evans—can't do anything for him anyway, poor devil. Come on, make yourself comfortable in the front seat with me. We don't dare start yet."

Dixon got out his flask and lifted it to the lips of Williams. The bullet had entered the abdomen and Williams was cursing with pain. Murtough got at his own flask and drank deeply.

"Now, we got to cover up until this blows over," Dixon said, as he climbed into the driver's seat and lighted cigarettes for himself and Murtough. Williams could not hold a cigarette to his lips. "You, too, have got to have a doctor and quick, but you'll have to stand it until we reach the city. Can't trust a stranger. And you'll both have to hide out. Williams may have to be put in a private hospital with that wound he's got. You'll only have to lay low until your shoulder heals. Nothing serious about a shoulder scratch. I'll look after Williams. Got any place you can go? You can't go to your own room, you know, not wounded like that, the police would ask questions."

"I don't know." Murtough thought of friends, but there was not one that could be called upon in such a grave emergency. "Yes. Take me to Tom Kildare's flat in Fifty-third Street. He'll look after me."

"All right, let's go. Williams, you'll have to grin and bear it," Dixon called back to the man in the tonneau. "You need a doctor badly and I've got to get you there, so I'll have to step on it."

The big car pulled out of the ditch easily. It was unharmed and Dixon swung it purringly down the straight, smooth road. Dixon drove directly to Dr. Norton's Sanitarium, a licensed hospital but one which asked no questions concerning the whys or wherefores of its patients. There he saw that Williams was cared for and the bullet in Murtough's shoulder was extracted. After the dressing Emmett was practically free of pain.

It was daybreak when Sheila was awakened by low knocking on the door of the flat. She called her father and Old Tom received Murtough.

"Ye got to take care of me for a few days," Murtough told Kildare. Sheila, a shawl over her nightgown, ran to him.

"Oh, ye're hurt! Emmett, ye're hurt!"

"What happened?" asked Old Tom.

"My truck was held up. I was plugged before I had a chance to get out of my seat."

"But ye should be in a hospital," cried Sheila.

"I had it treated and it's all right, but I must put up here for a few days now."

"But why? Ye havn't done anything?" queried Sheila anxiously. "You've not got into any trouble."

"No, but, well, ye see there's no one to do a thing for me where I got my room," stammered Murtough. He had not had time to fix in his own mind a plausible story. "Just let me lie down now and get some rest."

"Take him into my room an' put him to bed, father. Oh, Emmett, I know it must be hurting awful!"

Compares Lindbergh to Marconi

Memorable Flight Was As Great Scientific Achievement As Discovery of North and South Poles.

David Sarnoff, Vice-President and General Manager of the Radio Corporation of America, referring to Lindbergh's flight in a recent address before the Chicago Association of Commerce, said:

"Lindbergh's 3,000-mile flight across the Atlantic Ocean is more than the most romantic adventure in the lifetime of the present generation—it is a scientific achievement which deserves to take rank with the discovery of the North and South Poles, or the spanning of the Atlantic by wireless telegraphy. Luck played the least part in Lindbergh's epic adventure.

Radio Photograph of Gen. J. G. Harbord

"Lindbergh, despite his youth, is both a great navigator and a careful student of aviation. Sir Alan Cobham, himself a flyer of note, clearly proved this by the answers which he elicited from the young American when he asked him whether he had pursued his course by 'dead reckoning,' Mr. Sarnoff said. 'Lindbergh did. He succeeded not only through steering and fortitude, but through study and preparation. He knew every detail of his course; every movement of his compass."

The subject of Mr. Sarnoff's address was, "Joining Sight to Sound by Radio." The latest phase of radio development, he asserted, was in the transmission of sight as well as sound.

"We are just entering upon an era of communication by the square inch," Mr. Sarnoff continued. He predicted that the dot and dash system of transmission now universally in use, would eventually give way to facsimile, or visual transmission, when the complete message or picture would be flashed across oceans and continents in photographic form. "It is an interesting reflection," he pointed out, "that after thousands of years of communication experience, the simplest will probably go back, not to the too far future, to picture transmission—pictures of words as well as of photographic reproductions of images—for the basis of his written communication system. We are just entering upon the era of communication by the square inch.

"The problem of a practical system of facsimile transmission is the problem of obtaining high speed transmission. The basis already has been laid in the photo-radiogram service now in commercial operation by the Radio Corporation of America. During the past year we have transmitted hundreds of photographs, sketches and architect's drawings by radio between New York and Europe. In our laboratories sheets of typewriting containing over 1,500 ten-letter words have been perfectly transmitted and received in a few minutes, through improved transmitting and receiving apparatus with which we are now experimenting.

From an average sending time of 90 minutes per photograph when the service was first established a little over a year ago, the commercial time of transmission has been reduced to 15 minutes. Under laboratory conditions recently photographs have been transmitted by our engineers in two minutes with satisfactory detail. Much greater speeds are expected in the future.

"Recent developments in the great electrical laboratories of the country, Mr. Sarnoff said, would point to the possibility of a new motion picture technique, through the synchronization of sound with the moving picture on the screen.

"The motion picture art, its own critics admit, has much to gain from association with the electrical arts," he continued. "The really great advances made by the motion picture industry have been largely in the artistic field, in methods of distribution, in the development of palatial auditoriums for moving picture presentations. Considerable progress has been made, it is true, in the technique with reference to the actinic values of light, shutters, lenses, and the physical details of the photography. Nevertheless, the motion picture cannot afford to rest on its laurels, in these days of remarkable technical development. Insofar as the present tendency in radio communication is towards sight as well as sound, both radio and the moving picture industry are working in the same medium—light.

"Three distinct lines of progress are open to motion picture engineers. These are: (1) Authentic natural coloration; (2) Three-dimensional or stereoscopic projection; (3) The synchronization of sound and motion on the screen.

"Although it is clear that the silent drama of today has won a permanent place for itself, further development calls for a motion picture that has the color of life, perfect perspective and sound synchronized with sight.

"Since the synchronization of sound and sight on the motion picture screen adds exposition to demonstration, in the educational sense, a comparatively new field for motion picture development is opened up by this system. Educators for years have decried the fact that the motion picture has not played sufficient part in our educational system. But it is not difficult to understand the comparative lack of success of the present educational picture, cluttered with explanatory titles which necessarily delay the action, and are often obscure besides. Educational pictures might have a vastly greater entertainment value with the accompaniment of the human voice. Even the theory of relativity might be made interesting to a lay audience if we could both hear as well as see, Professor Einstein as he made diagrams on a blackboard, which should be far more enlightening than any abstract explanations through written titles. An astronomer could explain the inner workings of a giant telescope at a modern observatory, focus it on Mars and give an interesting lecture while the motion picture recorded its celestial observations through the telescope's eye."

Cleaning Crystals

A good method of cleaning a crystal, which apparently has lost some of its sensitiveness, is to place it in a small bottle containing some ether. Shake the bottle vigorously, after which remove the crystal with a pair of tweezers. It should be ready to use again after this cleaning, and if it doesn't, a second cleaning will bring it back to its normal strength.

INTERESTING AUTOMOBILE TOUR

Historical areas in eastern and western Pennsylvania are traversed in a new tour of the state outlined by Richard C. Haldeman, president of Pennsylvania Motor Federation.

The tour suggested by Mr. Haldeman is composed of two large loops and three small ones. The distance covered in the large Western Pennsylvania loop is 415 miles and in the large Eastern Pennsylvania loop, 422 miles, the two being joined by a highway section 124 miles in length. The small Western Pennsylvania loop is 154 miles long, that in Eastern Pennsylvania, 218 miles long, and the third, in South Central Pennsylvania, 95 miles. The entire tour covers 1,428 miles of entirely improved road surface in excellent condition.

The Western Pennsylvania tours not only take the traveler through the oil, gas and steel centers of the state, but through a territory rich in historic lore. The section between Washington and Uniontown, for example, is closely associated with the early life of George Washington, as is the section north from Washington through Pittsburgh to Franklin. This is Route 8, known as the William Flinn Highway. A particularly fine section of highway is that from Grantville, Maryland, through Johnstown and Ebensburg to Grampian on the Lakes-to-Sea Highway. North of Barnesboro this route passes through the ancient town of Cherry Tree. By an early treaty the Indians agreed to transfer to the Penns all the land east of the point on the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, at which a canoe grounded; and this canoe grounded at Cherry Tree.

Northwest of DuBois and Ridgway and west of Kane is the Allegheny National Forest. The towns of Brookville and Clarion are between Oil City and DuBois, and immediately north of them is the famous Cook Forest of virgin timber.

The small loop in the center of the map shown above takes the traveler from Pleasant Gap through State College to Water Street and thence over the William Penn Highway to Reedsville. The road from Reedsville north to Center Hall is through the famous "Seven Mountains."

The large loop in Eastern Pennsylvania is through a particularly scenic region—from Pottsville all the way around to Delaware Water Gap. Too few Pennsylvanians are acquainted with the beauty to be found between Berwick, Hazleton, Mauch Chunk and Lehighton. The Stroudsburg-Water Gap section is a summer playground. From Easton to Allentown the tour is over the first modern concrete road built in Pennsylvania. The slabs on this thoroughfare show less than half of one per cent. of wear, and seventy per cent. of them are in perfect condition. The major portion of the route from Allentown to Philadelphia is over the old Bethlehem Pike. From Philadelphia to Oxford the road traversed is the National Pike. At Ephrata, midway between Lancaster and Reading, is the very old Cloister of the German Baptist Brethren, built in 1735.

Feel Tired and Languid?

Waste Impurities in the Blood Make One Dull and Listless.

DO you wonder why you feel so drowsy and out of sorts? Too many feel always tired, dull and achy. Too often the cause is sluggish kidneys that permit waste impurities to remain in the blood and cause one to feel dull and listless—to have a nagging backache and annoying headaches and dizzy spells. That the kidneys are not working right is often shown by scanty or burning excretions. Assist the kidneys with Doan's Pills. Users everywhere recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

of the regular Republicans of Bristol who have thus wedded Italian opportunity and responsibility.

It happens for the moment that both these center in the Fifth Ward in the candidacy of Mr. Spezzano. We know that the Italian citizens of the Fifth will appreciate their opportunity, recognize their responsibility, and fulfill their obligation to the whole Italian citizenship of Bristol by nominating Mr. Spezzano with an overwhelming majority. Our prestige is, for the time being, entirely in their hands.

How shall they be sustained and supported by their compatriots in the other Wards of the Borough?

This was not intended to be a political editorial. But we would not regard ourselves as decent or fair if we did not remind our readers, in whatever Ward they may live, that there is such a thing in this life as standing by those who stand by you—and in this instance that means the whole Republican ticket, of which Mr. Spezzano is a part.

There is this also to be considered—that the full achievement of Italian prestige in our first appearance in the affairs of Borough Government may depend very largely upon whether Mr. Spezzano is a part of a Borough Council that is harmonious with, or antagonistic to, the projects, purposes and principles to which he subscribes as a regular Republican.

The responsibility that develops upon the Italian citizenship in the present campaign centers in the Fifth Ward, but it is not confined to the Italian citizens of the Fifth Ward by any means. It extends to every citizen of Italian birth, parentage or extraction, in whatever Ward he or she may live.

It is a time for all of us to pull together for that which represents greater recognition and advancement for the Italian citizenship, and its active participation in the management of the affairs of our town.
